Ethics and Health Care

Working in health care raises many ethical issues. The conflicts between core values of autonomy, health and safety, justice and the reality of poor decision-making can create ethical dilemmas. This workshop will focus on how to ethically address these issues with clients and patients while ensuring the privacy of their needs. It will also explore how our own values influence our work in healthcare, both positively and negatively. Elizabeth (Beth) West, DBH, LISW-S, will present. This program meets the ethics requirement for social workers.

Dynamics of Dependency and Chronic Illness

Adults with long term chronic illness are often labeled “difficult” or “resistant” by frustrated family members and service providers. Research over the past decade has identified similar psychosocial factors in those who experience debilitating chronic illness that may explain their behavior more effectively than labels. This workshop will explore the common behavioral consequences of dependency in adults and provide techniques to communicate and assist these patients and clients more effectively. Paula M. Taliaferro, MGS, LSW, will present.
