Writer's Block

The ink in the well has run dry Long ago.
Empty sheets of crisp white Lay sprawled on an intricate oak desk,
ever knowing the touch of soft lead or feeling the glide of
oceans of blue ink
sprawling into every corner of their pages.
A rigid chair sits
in stoic silence,
dust gathering softly
on the bends of the aged wood.
The blinds are drawn,
letting no light seep
through the crevices.
But a monster lurks,
hanging heavy in the air,
seeping into every fiber
of this hallowed space.
Swallowing inspiration
from the veins of all who enter.